ΘΕΜΑ Γ

Given that school is a microcosm of society, it is no wonder that bullying is becoming one of the most serious problems in schools nowadays. Violence and social conflict are ubiquitous and schools are no exception.

As a student, I cannot but feel both sad and worried about incidents of bullying in schools. Sad, because my fellow-students suffer and worried that I might be next. Unfortunately, strict punishment in itself has proved to be inadequate as bullies are neither afraid of nor affected by penalties inflicted by the school authorities. It is my firm belief that more should be done to address such a serious problem than just severe punishment of the wrongdoers.

Since school is a foundation which imitates social structures in a variety of activities, it should consolidate values and teach students respect for others and socially acceptable manners. This could be achieved through projects which promote teamwork, understanding and tolerance. In addition to this, students that have a tendency to be violent and are prone to bullying should be given psychological monitoring by children psychologists appointed in schools.

All in all, difficult as it may seem, the problem of bullying is not insoluble. It cannot be addressed, however, unless serious steps are taken by the Ministry of Education towards designing the fore mentioned projects and appointing the specialists who can deal with it effectively.
